MCCORMICK'S CREEK STATE PARK

GROUP CAMP

Long before pioneers entered the land now known as McCormick's Creek, the Miami roamed, camping along the banks of the White River to the north and south. Located two miles east of Spencer in the rolling hills of south-central Indiana, McCormick's Creek was dedicated as Indiana's first state park on July 4, 1916. The park originally encompassed 350 acres; it now boasts 1,956 acres of rich and varied natural beauty. One highlight of the park is the mile-long, 100-foot deep canyon through which McCormick's Creek runs. One can explore the subterranean world of Wolf Cave or climb to the top of the 90-foot fire tower.

The Recreation Center is open May through October and provides a variety of games and activities. The Nature Center is open year-round with scheduled naturalist-led activities. The Canyon Inn offers fine dining in a relaxed atmosphere.

Other facilities include an Olympic-sized swimming pool, a saddle barn, tennis courts, picnic shelters, and a diverse network of trails throughout the park.

Each group camp accommodates a minimum of 25 persons, up to a maximum of 100 persons.

ABOUT THE GROUP CAMPS

Located two miles east of Spencer in the rolling hills of south-central Indiana, McCormick's Creek State Park features two group camps, Camp McCormick and Camp NaWaKwa. Each camp contains four sleeping barracks with the capacity of twenty-five persons each. Each barrack is equipped with 13 bunk-type beds, a lavatory and electric lights. The barracks are not heated, nor do they have air conditioning. Shower facilities are located in a central shower house shared by both camps.

There is a large capacity dining hall/kitchen in each camp, heated by a fireplace. The dining halls have a capacity of one hundred persons. The kitchens are equipped with a commercial size stove w/oven, grill, walk-in freezer and cooler, and sinks with hot and cold running water. All utensils, dishes and silverware are provided as well as a coffee maker is provided. There are enough utensils to serve 100 persons.
